Do I need a surge protector?

Households experience power surges or power fluxes on a daily basis whether it be caused from everyday household appliances kicking on/off or because of weather. Over time, these power surges can damage electronic devices. Wireless Routers and Modems are some of the first things to be affected. Plugging your router or modem into a surge protector will help protect them. Having your electronics & appliances plugged into surge protectors could save you from having to replace them because of a little power surge.

If you are having problems connecting to the internet after a power surge, try unplugging your modem/router from the power for about 10 seconds and then plug it back in. This will reboot your modem/router and often takes care of the problem.

DO NOT HIT THE RESET BUTTON!

(Doing so will result in Lintel having to reconfigure your router at a cost of $20.)

Did you know...?

The ice cream cone invention is linked to the 1904 World's Fair in St. Louis. An ice cream vendor reportedly didn't have enough dishes to keep up with the demand, so he teamed up with a waffle vendor who rolled his waffles into cones.

July Round Up figure of $177.13 went to the
